

The Rise of Speed Deportation and the Role of Discretion
Shoba Sivaprasad Wadhia•

TABLE OF CONTENTS

- I. Introduction
- II. Understanding Speed Deportation
 - A. What is Speed Deportation?
 - B. Procedural Requirements and Speed Deportation
 - 1. Reinstatement of Removal
 - 2. Administrative Removal
 - 3. Expedited Removal
 - C. Can Those Subject to Speed Deportation Seek a Remedy?
- III. The Policy and Politics of Speed Deportation
 - A. Personal Interest Affected by Deportation
 - B. Risk of Error and Value of Additional Safeguards
 - 1. Agency Expertise
 - C. The Government’s Interest
 - 1. Improving Efficiency
 - 2. Enforcement Mission
- IV. The Relationship Between Prosecutorial Discretion and Speed Deportation
- V. Conclusion

I. INTRODUCTION

In 2013, the majority of people deported never saw a court room or immigration judge, and instead were quickly removed by the Department of Homeland Security.¹ Constructed as “expedited removals”,² “administrative removals”,³ and “reinstatement”,⁴

• Samuel Weiss Faculty Scholar, Clinical Professor of Law and Director, Center for Immigrants' Rights, Pennsylvania State University Dickinson School of Law. I deeply appreciate the feedback I received from scholars at Penn State Law’s Faculty Workshop (2014); Association of American Law Schools Conference on Clinical Education (2014); Immigration Law Teachers Workshop (2014) and the following individuals: Trina Realmuto, Jennifer Lee Koh, Margaret Taylor, and Holly Cooper. I am grateful to the editors at Columbia Journal of Race and Law for their editorial work and Lauren Hartley (DSL ’15) for her research assistance. Finally, I thank Penn State Law for supporting my scholarship.

2 INA § 235; See, 8 C.F.R. § 235.3.

these three programs were created by Congress and permit the agency to categorically remove or deport a person from the United States without undertaking the formalized and exhaustive removal hearing.⁵ While expedited removals, administrative removals and reinstatements each apply to different sets of individuals, the common feature is a limited set of procedural protections leading to speedy removals.⁶ The policy goals of speed deportation are economic because government resources like a trial attorney, immigration judge and a fundamentally fair hearing are saved. Higher deportation numbers may also benefit the image the government seeks to portray to policymakers who support amplified immigration enforcement. However, the human consequences of speed deportation are significant and can result in the ejection of people who qualify for relief before an immigration judge or otherwise present strong equities like family ties, long term residence and steady employment in the United States. Moreover, the risk that the government may wrongly classify a person as a candidate for speed deportation is more than a remote possibility. This Article examines deportations resulting from the expedited removal, administrative removal and reinstatement of removal orders programs and the extent to which the government has discretion to give individuals who present compelling equities,

3 INA § 238(b); See, 8 C.F.R. § 238.1.

4 INA § 241(a)(5); See, 8 C.F.R. 241.8.

5 INA § 240 spells out the statutory framework for a removal hearing and various “rights” and requirements that attach to such a hearing. Throughout this article, I will use “removal proceeding” “removal hearing” and “court hearing” interchangeably.

6 Throughout this article, the phrase “speed removal” or “speed deportation” will be used interchangeably to identify one or more of the following programs: administrative removal, reinstatement of removal and expedited removal. Another program aimed at accelerating “stipulated removal orders” is not reflected in this Article. “Stipulated removal orders” are authorized in the statute as “The Attorney General shall provide by regulation for the entry by an immigration judge of an order of removal stipulated to by the alien (or the alien’s representative) and the Service. A stipulated order shall constitute a conclusive determination of the alien’s removability from the United States.” INA § 240(d). One reason I do not include stipulated removal orders is that unlike the speed removal programs identified above, immigration judges participate in the stipulated removal program and are required to memorialize the removal order. For a thoughtful analysis focused on the stipulated removal order program, see Jennifer Lee Koh, Waiving Due Process (Goodbye): Stipulated Orders of Removal and the Crisis in Immigration Adjudication, 91 N.C.L. REV. 475 (2012-2013).

including eligibility for relief, a more complete court proceeding before an immigration judge.

In the last many years, the vast majority of removals have been in the form of speed deportation, but there remains no academic piece around the legitimacy of these programs.⁷ The data on removals from recent years suggest that a fraction of people are placed in removal proceedings and heard by an immigration judge before a removal order is entered. Of the approximately 438,000 non-citizens deported in 2013, 193,032 people were removed through expedited removal and 170,247 people were subject to a reinstated final order.⁸ Thus, 82.8% of all removals in 2013 were comprised of expedited removals and reinstatements. By contrast and at most, 75,142 or 17% of people were removed following a removal order issued by an immigration judge within the Executive Office for Immigration Review (EOIR).⁹ Data from 2012 reveals a similar proportion¹⁰: 419,000 noncitizens were removed from the United States, of which 163,498, or 39 percent, 7 The author acknowledges earlier work by Jill Family examining “diversions” from immigration removal proceedings and by Jennifer Lee Koh examining “stipulated removal” orders that enable a removal without a hearing. See Jill E. Family, A Broader View of the Immigration Adjudication Problem, 23 GEO. IMMIGR. L. J., 595 (2009); Jennifer Lee Koh, Waiving Due Process (Goodbye): Stipulated Orders of Removal and the Crisis in Immigration Adjudication, 91 N. C. L. REV., 475 (2013). However, these works do not dissect the speed deportation programs that are the subject of this Article.

8 DHS Office of Immigration Statistics, Immigration Enforcement Actions: 2013, page 5 Table 6
http://www.dhs.gov/sites/default/files/publications/ois_enforcement_ar_2013.pdf
(last visited October 10, 2014)

9 DHS Office of Immigration Statistics, Immigration Enforcement Actions: 2013, page 5 Table 6
http://www.dhs.gov/sites/default/files/publications/ois_enforcement_ar_2013.pdf
(last visited October 10, 2014) Possibly, the number of removal orders issued by an immigration judge within EOIR is lower than 75,142 as this data does not categorize administrative removal orders for 2013. Beyond the scope of this Article is an analysis of the number of people “voluntarily returned” is distinguishable from an order of removal and in 2013 implicated 178,371 people. See Immigration Enforcement Actions: 2013, page 7 Table 10
http://www.dhs.gov/sites/default/files/publications/ois_enforcement_ar_2013.pdf
(last visited October 10, 2014)

10 Source: U.S. Department of Homeland Security, ENFORCE Alien Removal Module (EARM), January 2013, Enforcement Integrated Database (EID), October 2012.

were removed through expedited removal orders and 149,202 or 35.6 percent were removed through reinstatements.¹¹ Likewise, 11,067 of these removals were enacted through administrative removal orders. These numbers reveal the extent to which DHS removed individuals without a day in court. The proportions of speed removals in 2012 and 2013 in contrast to removal orders that followed a court hearing are striking and illustrate how greatly DHS relies on speed removal programs to carry out its mission to enforce the immigration laws.¹²

Cumulatively, the numbers reveal that, at least for the last several years, more than half of the total population removed from the United States has bypassed a courtroom through a speed deportation program. Accordingly, it would be imprecise to conclude that the number of speed removals in the last year served as a counterbalance to the growth in humanitarian programs like deferred action for childhood arrivals (DACA),¹³ guidance documents on prosecutorial discretion,¹⁴ and other administrative programs designed to protect people with equities from deportation

11 Immigration Enforcement Actions: 2012, Summary, DHS, <https://www.dhs.gov/publication/immigration-enforcement-actions-2012> (last visited June 4, 2014).

12 The statistics from earlier years also reveal that the majority of individual removed from the United States underwent “speed deportation” through expedited removal or reinstatement, not administrative removal. For example, data from 2011 shows: “Reinstatements of final orders accounted for 130,000, or 33 percent, of all removals. Expedited removals accounted for 123,000, or 31 percent, of all removals.” Data from 2010 shows: “Reinstatements of final orders accounted for 131,000, or 34 percent, of all removals. Expedited removals accounted for 111,000, or 29 percent, of all removals.” OFFICE OF IMMIGRATION STATISTICS, POLICY DIRECTORATE, ANNUAL REPORT: IMMIGRATION ENFORCEMENT ACTIONS 1 (2010), available at <http://www.dhs.gov/xlibrary/assets/statistics/publications/enforcement-ar-2010.pdf>.

13 Consideration of Deferred Action for Childhood Process, U.S. CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION SERVICES, DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY, <http://www.uscis.gov/humanitarian/consideration-deferred-action-childhood-arrivals-process> (last visited March 10, 2014).

14 See John Morton, Director, U.S. Immigration & Customs Enforcement, on Civil Immigration Enforcement: Priorities for the Apprehension, Detention, and Removal of Aliens (Mar. 2, 2011), available at <http://www.ice.gov/doclib/news/releases/2011/110302washingtondc.pdf>; see also Shoba Sivaprasad Wadhia, Reflections on Prosecutorial Discretion One Year After the Morton Memo, 2012 LEXISNEXIS EMERGING ISSUES 6417 (June 14, 2012) (search title from LexisNexis homepage).

through non-enforcement programs. Data from prior to 2009 reveals different trends in removals.¹⁵ For example, in 2001, 38,943 individuals were removed through reinstatement orders¹⁶ (compared to 149,000 in 2013). Moreover, DHS did not formally publish a definition for, or data on, reinstatements from 2004-2008.¹⁷

This Article focuses on the discretion held by the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) to place noncitizens legally subject to speed removal into a complete court proceeding (removal proceedings) before an immigration judge. “Prosecutorial discretion” identifies the authority for DHS to decide to what extent to enforce the immigration laws against a person or group of persons, if at all. My interest in exploring the growth and consequences of speed removal is tied not only to my intellectual journey into the role of prosecutorial discretion¹⁸ in immigration

15 For example, data from 2004 indicated a reduction in expedited removals from the previous year. Expedited removals represented 21 percent of all formal removals in 2004. OFFICE OF IMMIGRATION STATISTICS, POLICY DIRECTORATE, ANNUAL REPORT, IMMIGRATION ENFORCEMENT ACTIONS: 2004 (2004), available at <http://www.dhs.gov/xlibrary/assets/statistics/publications/AnnualReportEnforcement2004.pdf>.

16 See OFFICE OF IMMIGRATION STATISTICS, POLICY DIRECTORATE, ANNUAL REPORT, IMMIGRATION ENFORCEMENT ACTIONS: 2004 (2004), available at <http://www.dhs.gov/xlibrary/assets/statistics/publications/AnnualReportEnforcement2004.pdf>.

17 See, Yearbook of Immigration Statistics, DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY, <https://www.dhs.gov/yearbook-immigration-statistics> (last visited Mar. 30, 2014).

18 See e.g., Shoba Sivaprasad Wadhia, Wiley A. Branton/Howard School of Law Symposium, Prosecutorial Discretion in Immigration Law, 57 HOW. L.J. (Summer 2014); Shoba Sivaprasad Wadhia, My Great FOIA Adventure and Discoveries of Deferred Action Cases at ICE, 27 Geo. Immig. L.J., 345 (2013); Shoba Sivaprasad Wadhia, In Defense of DACA, Deferred Action, and the DREAM Act, 91 TEXAS L. REV. 59 (2013); Shoba Sivaprasad Wadhia, The Immigration Prosecutor and the Judge: Examining the Role of the Judiciary in Prosecutorial Discretion Decisions, 16 HARV. LATINO L. REV. 39 (2013); Shoba Sivaprasad Wadhia, The Role of Prosecutorial Discretion in Immigration Law, 9 CONN. PUB. INT. L. J. 243 (2010); SHOBA SIVAPRASAD WADHIA, THE MORTON MEMO AND PROSECUTORIAL DISCRETION: AN OVERVIEW, IMMIGRATION POLICY CENTER (July 2011), available at <http://www.immigrationpolicy.org/special-reports/morton-memo-and-prosecutorial-discretion-overview>; SHOBA SIVAPRASAD WADHIA, READING THE MORTON MEMO: FEDERAL PRIORITIES AND PROSECUTORIAL DISCRETION, IMMIGRATION POLICY CENTER- AMERICAN IMMIGRATION COUNCIL (2010), available at law but also to personal experience. In Fall 2013, the clinic I direct at Pennsylvania State Dickinson School of Law took on a pro bono case involving a man detained in York County Prison who received an administrative removal order and as a consequence was stripped of the process and rights he might have ordinarily been provided in a regular immigration court proceeding. Our client had immediate family members who were United States citizens and, in our view, was wrongly classified by DHS as an aggravated felon. Because his removal was predetermined by DHS through a speed deportation program, he was not afforded the opportunity to challenge his removability or apply for relief in “removal proceedings.” Instead, our client was issued a removal order and placed into narrow forum called “withholding only” proceedings, a forum described in greater detail below.

To facilitate the analysis of the programs analyzed for this Article and how they interact with discretion generally, a short background is in order. The Department of Homeland Security, or DHS, is a cabinet level agency created after September 11, 2001.¹⁹ DHS is composed of multiple sections, three of which play a robust role in immigration: Customs and Border Protection (CBP),²⁰ Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE)²¹ and United States Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS).²² While both ICE and CBP play a significant role in apprehending and processing noncitizens for removal,²³ ICE bears responsibility for executing removal orders. In this way, when ICE apprehends, detains, and processes noncitizens for speed removal, it serves all at once as the police, jailor and judge.²⁴

<http://www.immigrationpolicy.org/special-reports/reading-morton-memo-federal-priorities-and-prosecutorial-discretion>.

19 Homeland Security Act of 2002, Pub. L. No. 107-296, 116 Stat. 2135 (2002).

20 About CBP, CBP.GOV, DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY <http://www.cbp.gov/about/> (last visited March 10, 2014).

21 About ICE, ICE, DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY <http://www.ice.gov/about/overview/> (last visited March 10, 2014).

22 About Us, U.S. CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION SERVICES, DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY <http://www.uscis.gov/aboutus> (last visited March 10, 2014).

23 See e.g., FY 2013 ICE Immigration Removals, ICE, <https://www.ice.gov/removal-statistics/>.

DRAFT – CITE ONLY WITH AUTHOR’S PERMISSION
FORTHCOMING Fall 2014
COLUM. J. RACE & L. VOL. 5, ISSUE 1

A second agency responsible for making decisions about deportation is the Department of Justice (DOJ). Within DOJ is a unit called the Executive Office for Immigration Review (EOIR), which itself is comprised of more than 250 immigration judges and 59 immigration courts throughout the United States as well as well and administrative appellate division known as the Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA).²⁵ While an immigration judge or BIA member is not herself independent from the Executive Branch or elected for an indefinite period like an Article III judge,²⁶ he or she functions like an administrative law judge and is bound by regulation to exercise independent judgment when conducting proceedings.²⁷ In 2013, immigration judges handled 193,350 cases

24 Only in the administrative removal process does the legal framework call for the arresting officer to be different from the deciding officer. See INA § 238(b)(4)(F); See also, 8 C.F.R. § 238.1 (2011) (Proceedings Under Section 238(b) of the Act, Definitions, “Deciding Service officer means a district director, chief patrol agent, or another immigration officer designated by a district director, chief patrol agent, the Deputy Executive Associate Commissioner for Detention and Removal, or the Director of the Office of Juvenile Affairs, so long as that person is not the same person as the Issuing Service Officer.”)

25 About, Office of the Chief Immigration Judge, EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF IMMIGRATION REVIEW, THE UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, <http://www.justice.gov/eoir/ocijinfo.htm> (last visited March 10, 2014).

26 For a critique of the lack of independence of immigration judges, and suggestions that the immigration system reform and use Article III judges see Stephen H. Legomsky, Restructuring Immigration Adjudication, 59 DUKE L.J. 1635 (2010).

27 See e.g., 8 C.F.R. § 1003.10 (2007), Immigration Judges. “Powers and duties. In conducting hearings under section 240 of the Act and such other proceedings the Attorney General may assign to them, immigration judges shall exercise the powers and duties delegated to them by the Act and by the Attorney General through regulation. In deciding the individual cases before them, and subject to the applicable governing standards, immigration judges shall exercise their independent judgment and discretion and may take any action consistent with their authorities under the Act and regulations that is appropriate and necessary for the disposition of such cases.” Likewise, since the immigration court system sits within DOJ, there is a level of independence it has from ICE, which houses the attorneys responsible for defending the government in removal proceedings. But attorneys who represent the government in federal court proceedings at which noncitizens challenge final orders of removal are housed within DOJ in an office dubbed the Office of Immigration Litigation (OIL). See About, Office of Litigation, CIVIL DIVISION, THE UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, http://www.justice.gov/civil/oil/oil_home.html (last visited March 25, 2014).

DRAFT – CITE ONLY WITH AUTHOR’S PERMISSION
FORTHCOMING Fall 2014
COLUM. J. RACE & L. VOL. 5, ISSUE 1

and 187,677 of these cases were removal proceedings.²⁸ Other case types heard by immigration judges include deportation proceedings, exclusion proceedings, review of negative credible or reasonable fear findings by the asylum officer, among other proceedings.²⁹ Individuals in removal proceedings enjoy fundamental protections. Among the safeguards provided to such individuals are: the right to counsel at no expense to the government, the right to examine evidence, the right to present evidence and witnesses, the right to cross examine the government’s witnesses, the right to contest the allegations charged, the right to apply for relief from removal, and the right to file an administrative appeal from a negative decision by the immigration judge to the Board of Immigration Appeals.³⁰ Individuals may be able to raise a due process violation in removal proceedings in federal court.³¹

28 U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE EXECUTIVE OFFICE FOR IMMIGRATION REVIEW, FY 2013 STATISTICAL YEARBOOK, B1 (April 2014), available at <http://www.justice.gov/eoir/statpub/fy13syb.pdf>.

29 U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE EXECUTIVE OFFICE FOR IMMIGRATION REVIEW, FY 2013 STATISTICAL YEARBOOK, B1 (April 2014), available at <http://www.justice.gov/eoir/statpub/fy13syb.pdf>. As summarized by the EOIR Yearbook, “Deportation proceedings” refer to “case type initiated when the former Immigration and Naturalization Service [INS] filed an Order to Show Cause with an immigration court before April 1, 1997;” “Exclusion proceedings” refer to “A case type involving a person who, before April 1, 1997, tried to enter the United States but was stopped at the port of entry because the former [INS] found the person to be inadmissible,” and reviews of negative credible or reasonable fear findings by the asylum officer refer to situations where the immigration judge reviews a [DHS] asylum officer’s decision that a person has not established a requisite standard of fear to qualify for related court proceeding.” A full description of these proceedings here is limited because they are not a focus of this Article.

30 See e.g., INA § 240(b)(4).

31 See e.g., See Abdulai v. Ashcroft, 239 F.3d 542, 549 (3d Cir.2001) (“[A]liens facing removal are entitled to due process, which includes opportunity to make arguments on their own behalf”); Leslie v. Attn’y Gen’l, No. 08-3180 (3rd Cir. filed July 8, 2010) (“Aliens in removal proceedings are entitled to Fifth Amendment Due Process protection, which guarantees them a fundamentally fair removal hearing.”) It should be pointed out that “regular” removal proceedings have been criticized by scholars and advocates for lacking the safeguards available to defendants in criminal proceedings, in part, because the former are considered “civil.” For a greater discussion on this topic, see Juliet Stumpf, The Crimmigration Crisis: Immigrants, Crime, and Sovereign Power 56 AM. U. L. REV. 367 (2006) Stephen H. Legomsky, The New Path of Immigration Law: Asymmetric Incorporation of Criminal Justice Norms, 64 WASH. & LEE L.

II. UNDERSTANDING SPEED DEPORTATION

A. What is Speed Deportation?

For this Article, “speed deportation” refers to three programs operated by Department of Homeland Security to process and remove noncitizens without a hearing before the immigration judge. Again, these programs are creatures of Congress and authorized in three provisions of the immigration statute as: expedited removal; reinstatement; and administrative removal. Expedited removal applies to persons who arrive at a port-of-entry or within 100 miles of the border without sufficient documents or with fraudulent ones.³² Reinstatement applies to persons who “reenter” the United States without authorization after having departed the United States voluntarily or under a previous removal order. The order of removal is “reinstated” from the original date of the person’s original departure or removal order.³³

REV. 469 (2007); Peter L. Markowitz, Straddling the Civil-Criminal Divide: A Bifurcated Approach to Understanding the Nature of Immigration Removal Proceedings, 43 HARV. C. R.-C. L. L. REV. 289 (2008).

32 See INA § 235(b)(1)(A)(1) (providing that “If an immigration officer determines that an alien (other than an alien described in subparagraph (F)) who is arriving in the United States or is described in clause (iii) is inadmissible under section 212(a)(6)(C) or 212(a)(7), the officer shall order the alien removed from the United States without further hearing or review unless the alien indicates either an intention to apply for asylum under section 208 or a fear of persecution.); 8 C.F.R. § 235.3. See also DHS Office of Immigration Statistics, Immigration Enforcement Actions: 2013, (Defining Expedited Removal as “The removal without a hearing before an immigration judge of an alien arriving in the United States who is inadmissible because the individual does not possess valid entry documents or is inadmissible for fraud or misrepresentation of material fact; or the removal of an alien who has not been admitted or paroled in the United States and who has not affirmatively shown to the satisfaction of an immigration officer, that the alien had been physically present in the United States for the immediately preceding 2-year period (INA § 235(b)(1)(A)).”) http://www.dhs.gov/sites/default/files/publications/ois_enforcement_ar_2013.pdf (last visited October 10, 2014)

33 See INA § 241(a)(5) (providing that “If the Attorney General finds that an alien has reentered the United States illegally after having been removed or having departed voluntarily, under an order of removal, the prior order of removal is reinstated from its original date and is not subject to being reopened or reviewed, the alien is not eligible and may not apply for any relief under this Act, and the alien shall be removed under the prior order at any time after the Administrative removal applies to noncitizens that are not permanent residents of the United States and have been classified by DHS as convicted of an aggravated felony.³⁴ One complication is defining aggravated felony. Currently, the immigration code or INA lists more than one dozen categories for aggravated felony³⁵ including theft offenses, crimes of violence, drug trafficking, murder, fraud offenses involving at least a $10,000 loss to the victim, among other offenses.³⁶ The next section discusses the procedural protections and substantive remedies, if any, that do attach to speed deportation.

B. *Procedural Requirements and Speed Deportation*³⁷ reentry”); See also, 8 C.F.R. § 241.8. See also DHS Office of Immigration Statistics, Immigration Enforcement Actions: 2013, (Defining Reinstatement of Final Removal Orders as “The removal of an alien on the reinstatement of a prior removal order, where the alien departed the United States under an order of removal and illegally re-entered the United States (INA § 241(a)(5)). The alien may be removed without a hearing before an immigration judge.”) http://www.dhs.gov/sites/default/files/publications/ois_enforcement_ar_2013.pdf (last visited October 10, 2014)

34 See INA § 238(b)(1)-(2) (providing that “(1) The Attorney General may, in the case of an alien described in paragraph (2), determine the deportability of such alien under section 237(a)(2)(A)(iii) (relating to conviction of an aggravated felony) and issue an order of removal pursuant to the procedures set forth in this subsection or section 240. (2) An alien is described in this paragraph if the alien- (A) was not lawfully admitted for permanent residence at the time at which proceedings under this section commenced; or (B) had permanent resident status on a conditional basis (as described in section 216) at the time that proceedings under this section commenced.”; 8 C.F.R. § 238.1(b)(1); INA § 101(a)(43). See also DHS Office of Immigration Statistics, Immigration Enforcement Actions: 2013, (Defining Administrative Removal as “The removal of an alien not admitted for permanent residence, or of an alien admitted for permanent residence on a conditional basis pursuant to section 216 of the INA, under a DHS order based on the determination that the individual has been convicted of an aggravated felony (INA § 238(b)(1)). The alien may be removed without a hearing before an immigration judge.”) http://www.dhs.gov/sites/default/files/publications/ois_enforcement_ar_2013.pdf (last visited October 10, 2014)

35 INA § 101(a)(43).

36 INA § 101(a)(43).

37 Outside the scope of this Article but worthy of a mention is the extent to which a person can challenge a decision by DHS to place a person in speed removal under administrative law. Possibly, the decision made by DHS to place a person in administrative removal or reinstatement is an arbitrary one in which the officer can either a) place the same individual in a full removal proceeding, at which she can apply for any form of relief from removal before an

In theory, the procedural safeguards included in the statute and regulations for reinstatement of removal, expedited removal and administrative removal contains more “process” than other deportation schemes such as the stipulated removal order program³⁸ and those subject to in absentia orders of removal³⁹. Moreover, the legal framework for speed deportation enables a party to challenge his speed removal to a federal court. The procedural safeguards associated with speed deportation are detailed in this section. Practically speaking however, noncitizens face significant hurdles, including the short period one has to challenge removal, the inability to obtain evidence, understand the nature of the charges, or secure counsel.

1. Reinstatement of Removal

Under the reinstatement regulations, DHS is required to make the following findings: whether (1) the alien was subject to a prior order of removal; (2) the alien is the same person as the one named in the prior order and; (3) the alien unlawfully reentered the country.⁴⁰ In making a determination about whether the individual has unlawfully entered, the regulations require that DHS “...consider all relevant evidence, including statements made by the alien and any evidence in the alien's possession. The immigration officer shall attempt to verify an alien's claim, if any, that he or she was lawfully admitted, which shall include a check of Service data systems available to the officer.”⁴¹ Procedurally, the reinstatement of removal process commences when a DHS officer provides the immigration judge, or b) issue an administrative or reinstatement of removal order at which the best she can hope for if she has passed her “reasonable fear” interview before an asylum officer is mandatory withholding or Convention Against Torture protection. This argument is propelled by the fact that neither the statute nor the regulations contain guidance on how, or the circumstances under which, DHS should elect between placing a person in speed deportation or issuing and filing an NTA to commence removal proceedings.

38 INA § 240(d), 8 C.F.R. § 1003.25(b); see also, Jennifer Lee Koh, Waiving Due Process (Goodbye): Stipulated Orders of Removal and the Crisis in Immigration Adjudication, 91 N. C. L. REV., 475 (2013).

39 INA § 240(b)(5); 8 C.F.R. § 1003.26 (In absentia hearings).

40 See 8 C.F.R. § 241.8(a)(1)-(3).

41 8 C.F.R. § 241.8(a)(3).

noncitizen with a written notice of his determination.⁴² The regulations require DHS to provide a noncitizen with written notice of his decision if it determines he or she is subject to reinstatement. DHS must also advise the noncitizen about his ability to contest a reinstatement finding and reconsider his decision if a challenge is made.⁴³ The regulations require that individuals who express a fear of return be referred to an asylum officer for additional screening.⁴⁴ While not explicit in the regulations that govern reinstatement of removal, another section of the regulations clarify that any person who is subject to an “examination” (which presumably would include reinstatement of removal) has a right to counsel at no expense to the Government.⁴⁵

While the regulations that govern reinstatement cases are seemingly long, the actual time for removal is sometimes short. Professor Lee J. Teran has noted, “[In] most cases, particularly involving Mexicans arrested near the U.S./Mexico border, the process of reinstatement of removal can be completed in a matter of hours.”⁴⁶ Though the regulations provide an internal procedure for challenging speed deportation, a noncitizen’s inability to appeal a removal order to a neutral third party (an immigration judge or Board of Immigration Appeals) is troubling.⁴⁷

Individuals who receive a reinstatement order may challenge the legality of such order in a federal court of appeals through a legal vehicle called a “petition for review.” Importantly, the statutory language that governs judicial review states that a “petition for review” is the exclusive means of review for final

42 8 C.F.R. § 241.8(b).

43 8 C.F.R. § 241.8(b).

44 8 C.F.R. § 241.8(e).

45 8 C.F.R. § 292.5(b).

46 Lee. J Teran, Mexican Children of U.S. Citizens: “Vignes Prin” and Other Tales of Challenges to Asserting Acquired U.S. Citizenship, 14 SCHOLAR 583, 660 (Symposium 2012). In 2013, 75 percent of all reinstatements were applied to nationals of Mexico. See DHS Office of Immigration Statistics, Immigration Enforcement Actions: 2013, http://www.dhs.gov/sites/default/files/publications/ois_enforcement_ar_2013.pdf (last visited October 10, 2014)

47 See e.g., INA § 235(b)(1)(A)(1), 8 C.F.R. § 235.3(b).

orders of removal.⁴⁸ A petition for review must be filed within 30 days after a reinstatement removal order becomes final. Under the statute, a petition for review “shall be filed with the court of appeals of the judicial circuit in which the immigration judge completed the proceedings,”⁴⁹ so this creates ambiguity for people in reinstatement as those orders unilaterally are issued by DHS and, therefore, do not involve immigration judges unless the person is in reasonable fear proceedings which as detailed in the following section are triggered only after a person has been found to have a “reasonable fear” of persecution or torture. Moreover, even the order underlying a reinstatement order may have been issued by DHS (not an immigration judge). Most procedural due process challenges to reinstatement of removal orders have been rejected by federal courts.⁵⁰

While it may be true that judicial review is available for those who wish to challenge a final order of removal following a reinstatement of removal order, the statutory limitations and practical impediments to filing a petition to review in a circuit court all too real. For example, the person may be unfamiliar with his options for federal court review before he is deported because he lacks counsel, information or the will to remain in detention to fight his case. Moreover, many of the forms associated with speed deportation are in English and also lack information about the availability of judicial review. Moreover, filing a petition for review does not automatically “stay” a person’s deportation, so DHS can execute a removal order notwithstanding a timely filed petition for review.

2. Administrative Removal

The statutory language that governs administrative removal requires DHS to provide an individual with reasonable notice of the charges; notice of his right to be represented by counsel at no expense to the government; the right to inspect, examine and rebut

48 INA § 242(a)(5).

49 INA § 242(a)(5).

50 See e.g., Morales-Izquierdo, 486 F.3d at 493–95, 497 (“We are satisfied, moreover, that the [reinstatement] regulation provides sufficient procedural safeguards to withstand a facial challenge for patent procedural insufficiency.”) evidence; service of the record in person or by mail; among other requirements.⁵¹ The regulations for administrative removal proceedings also contain important requirements. Administrative removal proceedings commence when a noncitizen is served with a charging document called the “Notice of Intent to Issue a Final Administrative Removal Order.”⁵² This notice includes information about the grounds for removal, the ability for a noncitizen to seek counsel at no expense to the government, the opportunity to apply for withholding of removal if he fears persecution or torture in his country of removal and the ability to challenge his 238(b) classification.⁵³ This Notice must also be accompanied with a list of free local legal services. In the absence of a challenge by the noncitizen, or if DHS finds that the noncitizen’s rebuttal lacks a genuine issue affecting its findings, the removal order is executed within 14 days unless the 14 day period is waived.⁵⁴ Likewise, administrative removal orders require a supervisor to finalize the order.⁵⁵ If DHS ultimately finds that a noncitizen is not properly subject to administrative removal an officer can terminate the administrative removal proceedings and choose to place the individual in “regular” removal proceedings by issuing a Notice to Appear.⁵⁶ DHS is required to refer individuals to an asylum officer for additional screening if such individuals request to apply for protection under withholding of removal.⁵⁷

Like with reinstatement, individuals who face administrative removal order may file a “petition for review” within 30 days after an administrative removal order becomes final. Notably, judicial review is specifically mentioned in the statutory provision that governs administrative removal. Specifically, the statute requires a record be “maintained for judicial review.”⁵⁸ With respect to those otherwise precluded from 51 INA § 238(b)(4).

52 8 C.F.R. § 238.1(b)(2).

53 8 C.F.R. § 238.1(b).

54 8 C.F.R. § 238.1(d) and (f).

55 8 C.F.R. § 238.1(a) and (d).

56 8 C.F.R. § 238.1(d)(2)(iii).

57 8 C.F.R. § 238.1(f).

judicial review because of a statutory bar (such as a person found removable because of an aggravated felony), the immigration statute preserves jurisdiction for claims involving legal questions and constitutional claims.⁵⁹ Nevertheless, the practical impediments faced by those in administrative removal are similar to the reinstatement context insofar as they may lack the information about judicial review. Also, since the timeline for administrative removal is a short one (fourteen days), the likelihood that people can be wrongfully removed before a court of law concludes that a particular crime is not, in fact, an aggravated felony is very high.

3. Expedited Removal

In the expedited removal process, a DHS officer should advise the noncitizen of the charges against him or her in writing and provide him or her with an opportunity to respond.⁶⁰ Like with administrative removal, expedited removal orders are entered by a DHS examining officer after it has been approved by a supervisor.⁶¹ If a noncitizen who is subject to expedited removal indicates a fear of return to his home country, then DHS shall record this information and provide the noncitizen with a written description of the “credible fear” interview process, notice of the right to consult with others before the interview, and other information.⁶² Verified lawful permanent residents, refugees, asylees or United States citizens, may not be removed pursuant to expedited removal. The regulations contain a slim procedure for handling related claims.⁶³ For example, when someone in expedited removal claims to be a United States citizen, then the claim must be heard by an immigration judge in a forum called “claimed status review.”⁶⁴

58 INA § 238(b)(4)(E).

59 INA § 242(a)(2)(D).

60 8 C.F.R. § 235.3(b).

61 8 C.F.R. § 235.3(b)(7).

62 8 C.F.R. § 235.3(b)(4).

63 8 C.F.R. § 235.3(b)(5).

64 8 C.F.R. § 235.3(b)(5).

In expedited removal cases, judicial review is limited to habeas corpus challenges based on status claims, such as whether the individual is citizen, a lawful permanent resident, asylee or refugee and whether the person was ordered removed.⁶⁵

C. Can Those Subject to Speed Deportation Seek a Remedy?

Importantly, a fraction of individuals subject to expedited removal, administrative removal or reinstatement of removal may have the opportunity to apply for protection from harm before an immigration court - but this outcome is limited to those who are able to convince an asylum officer that their fear of persecution or torture is “reasonable” if the person is subject to reinstatement or administrative removal or “credible” if the person is subject to expedited removal.⁶⁶ If an asylum officer within USCIS concludes that an arriving asylum seeker subject to expedited removal has a “credible fear” of persecution or torture in her home country, then he or she will fill out the requisite worksheet and file the necessary paperwork with the immigration court to incept a regular removal hearing at which she can apply for asylum, withholding of removal and or protection under the Convention Against Torture before an immigration judge.⁶⁷ Notably, individuals who pass their credible

65 See e.g., Smith v. CBP, No. 11-35556 (9th Cir. filed Jan. 9, 2014).

66 See 8 C.F.R. § 238.1 ((3) Withholding of removal. If the alien has requested withholding of removal under § 208.16 of this chapter, the deciding officer shall, upon issuance of a Final Administrative Removal Order, immediately refer the alien's case to an asylum officer to conduct a reasonable fear determination in accordance with § 208.31 of this chapter.”); 8 C.F.R. 241.8 (“(e)Exception for withholding of removal. If an alien whose prior order of removal has been reinstated under this section expresses a fear of returning to the country designated in that order, the alien shall be immediately referred to an asylum officer for an interview to determine whether the alien has a reasonable fear of persecution or torture pursuant to § 208.31 of this chapter.”); 8 C.F.R. 235.3 (“(4) Claim of asylum or fear of persecution or torture. If an alien subject to the expedited removal provisions indicates an intention to apply for asylum, or expresses a fear of persecution or torture, or a fear of return to his or her country, the inspecting officer shall not proceed further with removal of the alien until the alien has been referred for an interview by an asylum officer in accordance with 8 CFR 208.30. The examining immigration officer shall record sufficient information in the sworn statement to establish and record that the alien has indicated such intention, fear, or concern, and to establish the alien's inadmissibility.”)

67 INA§ 235(b)(1)(B)(v) (“Credible fear of persecution defined: For purposes of this subparagraph, the term ‘credible fear of persecution’ means that there is a significant possibility, taking into account the credibility of the statements made by the alien in support of the alien’s claim and such other facts as are known to fear interview are served with a “Notice to Appear” and placed into formal removal proceedings once the NTA is filed with the immigration court.⁶⁸ In this way, asylum seekers who ordinarily may have been subject to expedited removal are instead placed into “regular” court proceedings accompanied with the variety of procedural safeguards described earlier.

DRAFT – CITE ONLY WITH AUTHOR’S PERMISSION
FORTHCOMING Fall 2014
COLUM. J. RACE & L. VOL. 5, ISSUE 1

Persons subject to administrative removal or reinstatement who indicate a fear of persecution or torture in their home country must be given a “reasonable fear”⁶⁹ interview before an asylum officer and if successful are placed in a limited proceeding known as a “withholding only” proceeding.⁷⁰ During a “withholding only” the officer, that the alien could establish eligibility for asylum...”); 8 C.F.R. § 235.6 (“Referral to Immigration Judge”).

68 See e.g., 8 C.F.R. § 235.6 (“Referral to immigration judge. (a) Notice (1) Referral by Form I-862, Notice to Appear. An immigration officer or asylum officer will sign and deliver a Form I-862 to an alien in the following cases:... (ii) If an asylum officer determines that an alien in expedited removal proceedings has a credible fear of persecution or torture and refers the case to the immigration judge for consideration of the application for asylum.); 8 C.F.R § 208.30(f) (“Procedures for a positive credible fear finding. If an alien, other than an alien stowaway, is found to have a credible fear of persecution or torture, the asylum officer will so inform the alien and issue a Form I-862, Notice to Appear, for full consideration of the asylum and withholding of removal claim in proceedings under section 240 of the Act.”).

69 8 C.F.R. § 208.31 (2011) (“Reasonable fear of persecution or torture determinations involving aliens ordered removed under section 238(b) of the Act and aliens whose removal is reinstated under section 241(a)(5) of the Act. ...The alien shall be determined to have a reasonable fear of persecution or torture if the alien establishes a reasonable possibility that he or she would be persecuted on account of his or her race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group or political opinion, or a reasonable possibility that he or she would be tortured in the country of removal. For purposes of the screening determination, the bars to eligibility for withholding of removal under section 241(b)(3)(B) of the Act shall not be considered...”) The USCIS website has a concise fact sheet on the reasonable fear screening process. See Asylum, Questions and Answers: Reasonable Fear Screening Process, U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services, <http://www.uscis.gov/humanitarian/refugees-asylum/asylum/questions-answers-reasonable-fear-screenings> (last updated June 18, 2013).

70 See generally, 8 C.F.R. § 208.31 (Reasonable fear of persecution or torture determinations involving aliens ordered removed under section 238(b) of the Act and aliens whose removal is reinstated under section 241(a)(5) of the Act); See also, 8 C.F.R. § 208.31(c) (“The alien shall be determined to have a reasonable fear of persecution or torture if the alien establishes a reasonable possibility that he or she would be persecuted on account of his or her race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group or political proceeding, a person may apply for relief for a traditional form of withholding of removal and protection under the Convention Against Torture. The governing statutes stipulate that individuals with a final administrative removal order or reinstatement are ineligible for any other kind of relief from removal.⁷¹ The agency has opined that, as a matter of law, the statutory prohibition on relief is consistent with the availability of withholding of removal or Convention Against Torture relief because “they are merely restrictions on the place to which an alien may be removed and do not constitute affirmative permission to remain in the United States.”⁷²

The regulations further implement these statutory bars to relief by providing that individuals in withholding only proceedings are precluded from applying for other forms of relief from removal that might ordinarily be available to someone in regular removal proceedings, such as adjustment of status, cancellation of removal, or asylum.⁷³ Traditional withholding of removal requires an individual to prove a clear probability of persecution by the government or an actor the government is unable or unwilling to control because of a race, religion, nationality, political opinion or membership in a particular social group.⁷⁴ By contrast, the Torture Convention requires an individual to prove a likelihood of torture by the government or with the opinion, or a reasonable possibility that he or she would be tortured in the country of removal.”).

71 See INA § 238(b)(5) (“No alien described in this section shall be eligible for any relief from removal that the Attorney General may grant in the Attorney General’s discretion.”); INA § 241(a)(5) (“If the Attorney General finds that an alien has reentered the United States illegally after having been removed...the prior order of removal is reinstated from its original date and is not subject to being reopened or reviewed, the alien is not eligible and may not apply for any relief under this Act, and the alien shall be removed the prior order at any time after the reentry.”).

72 See U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement, Memorandum from John Torres, Acting Director for Office of Detention and Removal Operations to Field Office Directors, Detention and Deportation Officer’s Field Manual Update, Chapter 1, March 27, 2006 (on file with author).

73 See e.g., 8 C.F.R. 208.31(g)(1)(i) (“The immigration judge shall consider only the alien’s application for withholding of removal under § 208.16 and shall determine whether the alien’s removal to the country of removal must be withheld or deferred.”).

74 INA 241(b)(3)(A); 8 C.F.R. § 208.16.

acquiescence of the government.⁷⁵ Both forms of relief place the burden on an applicant to prove eligibility for relief and are adjudicated by an individual judge following an adversarial proceeding. Like with a regular immigration court proceeding, individuals in withholding only proceedings have the right to examine evidence offered by the government, rebut evidence, and be represented by counsel at their own expense.⁷⁶ Conceivably, Congress removed the possibility for individuals subject to speed deportation programs to apply for additional relief under the theory that some people are less deserving of a full day in court. Notably, U.S. immigration law is comprised of staggered safeguards reflecting policy choices by Congress about who is worthy of protection.⁷⁷

While the legal framework that governs noncitizens subject to reinstatement or administrative removal suggests that noncitizens who have expressed a reasonable fear may only apply for withholding of removal and relief under the Convention Against Torture, there is a strong argument that such applicants can still apply for asylum. Specifically, the asylum statute affirms that “any alien ...irrespective of such alien’s status, may apply for asylum.”⁷⁸ A study of the asylum statute alone would make the regulatory language of reinstatement and administrative removal limiting potential relief to withholding of removal and Convention Against Torture immaterial because the statute is so clear that “any alien” has the right to apply for asylum. Notably, the American Immigration Lawyers Association (AILA) and refugee rights litigants have argued that “The reinstatement regulations limiting 75 8 C.F.R. (1) 208.17-18.

76 See 8 C.F.R. 208.31(e), 8 C.F.R. § 208.16; See also, Chapter 7 (Other Proceedings before Immigration Judges) EXECUTIVE OFFICE FOR IMMIGRATION REVIEW, IMMIGRATION COURT PRACTICE MANUAL, http://www.justice.gov/eoir/vll/OCIJPracManual/Practice_Manual_1-27-14.pdf#page=119 (last revised June 10, 2013).

77 For a broader examination of other “diversions” in the immigration system, see Jill Family, A Broader View of the Immigration Adjudication Program, 23 GEO. IMMIGR. L.J. 595 (2008-2009). For an analysis about narratives told about “good” immigrants versus “bad” immigrants, see Elizabeth Keyes, Beyond Saints and Sinners: Discretion and the Need for New Narratives in the U.S. Immigration System, 26 GEO. IMMIGR. L.J. 207 (2011-2012).

78 See INA 208(a)(1) [emphasis added].

protection from persecution to withholding of removal must be struck down ...”⁷⁹ The impact of barring asylum in this way is significant and potentially in contravention with the United States’ obligations under international law.⁸⁰ One story featured by AILA in a related amicus brief involved “Mirabel” a woman from Honduras who was ordered removed in 2001.

Mirabel returned to Honduras where she became romantically involved with a man who became abusive after she moved in with him. He isolated and confined her to his home and raped her over and over again. He tied her up and permitted his friends to gang rape her. In one incident, after torturing her, he forced her to cook for his friends. When she did not perform to his liking, he broke a beer bottle, cut her, and beat her until she fell unconscious. After Mirabel’s abuser left her for dead, she escaped to Mexico. While there, Mirabel bumped into one of her abuser’s friends who had raped her. He told Mirabel that her former boyfriend was looking for her to finish the job of killing her. Mirabel then sought refuge in the United States, where the Government reinstated her prior removal order. Although an asylum officer reached a positive “reasonable fear” determination, Mirabel is now in “withholding only” proceedings in which she will not even be considered for asylum.⁸¹

79 Brief of Amicus for American Immigration Lawyers Association, et al., at 6, Maldonado-Lopez v. Holder (No. 12-72800), AILA InfoNet Doc. No. 13080204 (posted Feb. 8, 2013) available at <http://www.aila.org/content/default.aspx?docid=45288>; See also, Fernandez-Vargas v. Gonzales, 548 U.S. 30, n.4 (2006) (“Notwithstanding the absolute terms in which the bar on relief is stated, even an alien subject to §241(a)(5) may seek withholding of removal under 8 U. S. C. §1231(b)(3)(A) (2000 ed.) (Alien may not be removed to country if “the alien’s life or freedom would be threatened in that country because of the alien’s race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion”), or under 8 C.F.R. §§241.8(e) and 208.31 (2006) (raising the possibility of asylum to aliens whose removal order has been reinstated under INA §241(a)(5))”).

80 See INA 241(b)(3), which incorporates the international law principle of nonrefoulement articulated in The Convention on the Status of Refugees. See Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees, art. 33, July 8 1951, 189 U.N.T.S. 137.

81 Brief of Amicus for American Immigration Lawyers Association, et al., at 1-2, Maldonado-Lopez v. Holder (No. 12-72800), AILA InfoNet Doc. No.

Although a full discussion about the differences between asylum, withholding of removal and CAT relief are beyond the scope of this Article, it should be noted that a person granted asylum receives a more secure status, the ability to include their spouse and children as derivatives, and eventually obtain lawful permanent resident (green card holder) and citizenship.⁸² None of these benefits are available to a person who is granted withholding of removal or CAT. Likewise, the Board of Immigration Appeals has articulated that a grant of withholding of removal requires an explicit order of removal, further indicating that this form of protection operates as a legal matter as a restriction on where a person may be removed and not as permission to remain in the United States indefinitely.⁸³

Statistics from Executive Office for Immigration Review are less clear about the number of regular removal proceedings that originated from the expedited removal process but reveal that immigration courts received 2,269 withholding only⁸⁴ proceedings

13080204 (posted Feb. 8, 2013), available at <http://www.aila.org/content/default.aspx?docid=45288>.

82 See FACTSHEET: ASYLUM AND WITHHOLDING OF REMOVAL RELIEF CONVENTION AGAINST TORTURE PROTECTIONS, U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF IMMIGRATION REVIEW, at 6 (2009), available at <http://www.justice.gov/eoir/press/09/AsylumWithholdingCATProtections.pdf>.

83 See Matter of I-S- & C-S-, 24 I&N Dec. 432 (BIA 2008) (“When an Immigration Judge issues a decision granting an alien’s application for withholding of removal under section 241(b)(3) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1231(b)(3) (2000), without a grant of asylum, the decision must include an explicit order of removal.”); See also, EOIR Benchbook Alert, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF IMMIGRATION REVIEW, http://www.justice.gov/eoir/vll/benchbook/alert_wr.htm (2008).

84 For statistical purposes, EOIR considers “withholding only proceedings” as part of the overall “immigration matters” it handles in a given fiscal year. See e.g., OFFICE OF LEGISLATIVE AND PUBLIC AFFAIRS, FY2012 STATISTICAL YEARBOOK, EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF IMMIGRATION REVIEW, C2-C3 (rev. March 2013), available at <http://www.justice.gov/eoir/statspub/fy12syb.pdf>. Likewise, the EOIR statistical yearbook for 2012 defines “A withholding only hearing is initiated when the following conditions have been met:

- A previous removal/deportation/exclusion order has been reinstated by DHS or the alien has been ordered removed (administratively) by DHS (based upon a conviction for an aggravated felony) and the alien expresses a fear of persecution or torture if returned to the country of removal and that claim is reviewed by an asylum officer, and in fiscal year 2013.⁸⁵ Again, these proceedings refer to those individuals who were found to have a “reasonable fear of persecution or torture” by the asylum officer or the immigration judge (following an appeal to a negative reasonable fear finding by the asylum officer) following an administrative removal order or reinstatement order.

While withholding only hearings make up only a small fraction of the overall caseload untaken by EOIR each year, the growth of such hearings is notable. According to the EOIR Statistical Yearbook for 2013, the immigration court received 240 withholding only proceedings in 2009, 497 such proceedings in 2010, 886 proceedings in 2011, 1,090 proceedings in 2012 and 2,269 such proceedings in 2013.⁸⁶ On the one hand, the growth in numbers may indicate that DHS is doing a better job at screening people subject to reinstatement or administrative removal who express a fear of persecution or torture or that more people in these categories have facts that are more likely to lead to a reasonable fear finding. On the other hand, and more likely given the trend of increased speed deportations the growth in withholding only hearings may be tied to the growth in reinstatements and administrative removals by DHS, which itself may be associated with a change of policy, under which DHS will now throw into a speed removal program people who might have ordinarily been issued a Notice to Appear and placed in removal proceedings before an immigration judge. It may be hard to pin down whether

-
- An asylum officer has concluded that the alien has a reasonable fear of persecution or torture or an immigration judge conducted a reasonable fear review proceeding and found that reasonable fear of persecution or torture exists, OR
 - An alien who is an applicant for admission to Guam or the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands (CNMI) under the Guam-CNMI Visa Waiver Program under section 212(i) of the Immigration and Nationality Act or who was admitted to Guam or the CNMI under the Guam-CNMI Visa Waiver Program and has violated their conditions of admission is subject to withholding only proceedings prior to January 1, 2015.”

85 U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE EXECUTIVE OFFICE FOR IMMIGRATION REVIEW, FY 2013 STATISTICAL YEARBOOK, B1 (2014), available at <http://www.justice.gov/eoir/statspub/fy13syb.pdf>.

86 U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE EXECUTIVE OFFICE FOR IMMIGRATION REVIEW, FY 2013 STATISTICAL YEARBOOK, B1 (2014), available at <http://www.justice.gov/eoir/statspub/fy13syb.pdf>.

the increase in withholding only hearings is unlawful as “arbitrary” because people with similar facts and backgrounds can just as easily be given a formal 240 removal hearing or instead placed in a truncated withholding only proceeding after being ordered removed and then passing a reasonable fear interview. Perhaps the growth reflects a policy choice by DHS to effectuate removals with more efficiency and reach a certain number of removals – in which case the change may be deemed “lawful but awful” among those who advocate for a full day in court or at the very least an opportunity for anyone with a reasonable fear of harm to apply for asylum. The next section examines the policy and politics of these programs in more detail.

III. THE POLICY AND POLITICS OF SPEED DEPORTATION

To examine the legitimacy of speed deportation programs as a policy matter, this section considers 1) the personal interest of the noncitizen subject to speed deportation; 2) the risk of error, and value of additional procedural safeguards; and 3) the government’s interest, including the fiscal and administrative burdens of more procedures.⁸⁷

A. Personal Interest Affected by Deportation

Some might take a position that the personal interest is low in the case of a first-time visitor to the United States facing expedited removal. Likewise, some may argue that individuals who enter the United States without inspection or after a previous removal (reinstatement) may have formed personal ties to the United States but are not entitled to these ties because they have violated the law.⁸⁸ Moreover, it may be reasonable to argue that since administrative removal is aimed at persons who are not lawful permanent residents of the United States and who have been found to have an aggravated felony conviction, the interest is low. But these positions are less attractive if a person is fleeing persecution or torture, or entering the United States to reunite with a family member or eligible for relief from removal. As a policy matter, my view is that personal interests should not be measured by a person’s manner of entry, immigration status or even criminal history alone as the individual stakes of nonjudicial deportation are all too high.

⁸⁷ This section loosely follows the Mathews v. Eldridge, 424 U.S. 319 (1976) test/standard for considering the policy and politics of speed deportation but it should be noted that the author does not intend to use Mathews to question the constitutionality of speed deportation programs.

⁸⁸ David Martin, Two Cheers for Expedited Removal, 40 VA. J. OF INT’L. L. 673, 690.

The human consequences of speed deportation cannot be underestimated. It can result in a forced expulsion of people who bear strong equities like tender age, community ties, intellectual promise, and family members who are United States citizens. The legal framework that governs speed removal does not contain exceptions for individuals who have other equities or even eligibility for a benefit like adjustment of status perhaps through marriage to a United States citizen or sponsorship by a United States employer. Imagine the case of Eduardo, an undocumented worker from Chile who enters the United States as a student at University X, violates the term of his visa by working without authorization and is convicted once for a misdemeanor crime that qualifies as an “aggravated felony.” Thereafter, Eduardo meets and falls in love with a friend from University X who was born in the United States and together, they decide to marry in a church ceremony. Eduardo is viewed as a caring father and husband and volunteer in his community. Under the immigration law, Eduardo can be arrested and placed in “administrative removal” based on his criminal history and then removed within 14 days of the final removal order.⁸⁹ The administrative removal scheme does not exempt people like Eduardo who are married to a United States citizen or a father to a United States citizen. The troubling aspect of this statutory scheme is two-fold; it both prevents Eduardo from seeing an immigration judge or undergoing removal proceedings before he is removed, and it categorically bars him from any immigration relief for which he might otherwise qualify, such as adjustment of status.

As has been analyzed earlier, and like with the administrative removal statute, the reinstatement statute prevents individuals, thousands of whom may have no criminal history at all from seeking relief before an immigration judge. The act of someone leaving the United States after a removal order and then coming back into the United States without admission might be grave enough to make the reinstatement sound reasonable. The challenge is that these same individuals may be otherwise law-abiding but still choose to enter unlawfully in order to reunite with their family, flee from persecution, leave a poverty state or access medical care for a serious condition. Possibly, individuals who bear these equities should have the opportunity to present them to an immigration judge—as opposed to a DHS officer—and apply for relief for which they are eligible (based on these equities) before deportation.

⁸⁹ 8 CFR 1238.1(f) (“Executing final removal order of deciding Service officer - (1) Time of execution. Upon the issuance of a Final Administrative Removal Order, the Service shall issue a Warrant of Removal in accordance with §1241.2 of this chapter; such warrant shall be executed no sooner than 14 calendar days after the date the Final Administrative Removal Order is issued, unless the alien knowingly, voluntarily, and in writing waives the 14-day period.”).

B. Risk of Error and Value of Additional Safeguards

This section explores the possibility that DHS will erroneously place a person in speed deportation program and the extent to which adding safeguards would reduce this error. Arguably, the existing statutory and regulatory framework contains enough process to minimize the risk of error. These “errors” can take many forms - for example, if DHS mistakenly executes an expedited removal order to a lawful permanent resident; or issues an administrative removal order to a noncitizen who was a convicted for a crime that does not qualify as an aggravated felony. If there is a significant risk of error under the existing framework, the next question is whether additional procedural safeguards can prevent or minimize this risk. If adding more procedure does not reduce the risk of erroneous deportation, there may be room to argue that speed deportation programs should be dissolved altogether. The counterargument might be that speed deportation programs need not be perfect to be rational and that mistakenly removing some in order to operate a streamlined deportation program is legitimate.

1. Agency Expertise

Related to the analysis about the possibility for mistakenly placing people in speed deportation is whether DHS has the proficiency to screen and determine that a person is legally subject to speed deportation. Arguably, if DHS lacks the expertise to make determinations associated with expedited removal, reinstatement or administrative removal the risk of error is greater. To illustrate, DHS may issue an expedited removal order to any noncitizen who arrives without documentation or with false documentation if he or she expresses a fear of return based on persecution or torture.⁹⁰ While officers of DHS are trained to assess verbal and behavioral cues that might indicate a person may fear harm in her home country, only a small percentage of individuals subject to expedited removal are referred to an asylum officer for a credible fear interview. According to DHS, “From FY 2000 through FY 2009, the annual percentage of individuals subject to expedited removal who expressed a fear of return ranged from 4-6%. From FY 2010 through FY 2012, the annual percentage ranged from 7-9%.”⁹¹ Possibly, the low rate of referrals is tied to the actual number of arriving noncitizens who qualify for referral to an asylum officer for a credible fear interview. But a second possibility is that DHS is turning away legitimate asylum seekers because of a lack of information or expertise to assess the cues appropriate for such referral. One study from 2005 conducted by the United States Commission for International Religion Freedom found that “[I]n nearly 15 percent of the cases which Study experts observed directly and in person, asylum seekers who expressed a fear of return were nevertheless removed without a referral to an Asylum Officer. Of those cases, nearly half of the files indicated that the asylum seeker had not expressed any fear.”⁹² More recently, American Immigration Council published a report detailing the state of credible fear and asylum procedures and reported, “We heard frequent complaints that CBP officers often dissuade people from seeking asylum, sometimes berating and yelling at them. Some advocates complained that clients were harassed, threatened with separation from their families or long detentions, or told their fears did not amount to asylum claims.”⁹³

90 See INA § 238(b).

91 Written testimony of USCIS Deputy Director Scialabba, ICE Deputy Director Daniel Ragsdale, CBP Office of Border Patrol Chief Michael Fisher for House Committee on the Judiciary hearing titled “Asylum: Is it Overwhelming our Borders?”, DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY 6 (released Dec. 2013), <https://www.dhs.gov/news/2013/12/12/written-testimony-uscis-ice-and-cbp-house-committee-judiciary-hearing-titled-%E2%80%9CAsylum%20-%E2%80%9C>

92 UNITED STATES COMMISSION ON INTERNATIONAL RELIGIOUS FREEDOM, EXPEDITED REMOVAL REPORT CARD: 2 YEARS LATER 4 (2007), available at http://www.uscirf.gov/sites/default/files/resources/stories/pdf/scorecard_final.pdf.

93 Mexican and Central American Asylum and Credible Fear Claims: Background and Context, AMERICAN IMMIGRATION COUNCIL, 21 (May 21, 2014), available at <http://www.americanimmigrationcouncil.org/special-reports/mexican-and-central-american-asylum-and-credible-fear-claims-background-and-context>.

According to one Florida non-profit attorney featured in the Council’s report “CBP doesn’t do its job and ask the right questions about fear of return. People are removed under expedited removal and then come right back because they are afraid. Then they are only eligible for a reasonable fear interview and withholding of removal and detained for a long time.”⁹⁴ This anecdote sheds light not only on the possibility that CBP may erroneously deport noncitizens instead of making a referral to the asylum officer for a credible fear interview, but also displays how the different speed deportation programs interact with one another. In the aforementioned example, individuals are initially issued an expedited removal order and upon return may qualify only for a reasonable fear interview because they are then subject to a reinstated order. As a final illustration of public concern around the referral process, the American Immigration Lawyers Association (AILA) circulated a survey to its membership soliciting examples of “individuals who were apprehended by CBP after crossing into the U.S. and issued expedited removal orders without the opportunity for a credible fear interview when the individual clearly expressed fear to the officer or was not asked about a fear of return at all.”⁹⁵ Presumably, this survey suggests dissatisfaction about the quality of CBP’s screening process for genuine refugees who face expedited removal. There is less concrete evidence about the quality of DHS referrals of noncitizens reinstatement or administrative removal orders to an asylum officer after they express a fear of persecution or torture. Part of the ambiguity is tied to the practical reality that many pro bono attorneys do not interface with this population until after they have passed their reasonable fear interviews.⁹⁶

94 Mexican and Central American Asylum and Credible Fear Claims: Background and Context, AMERICAN IMMIGRATION COUNCIL, 85 (May 21, 2014), available at <http://www.americanimmigrationcouncil.org/special-reports/mexican-and-central-american-asylum-and-credible-fear-claims-background-and-context>.

95 AILA Seeks Examples of CBP Denying Individuals Access to Credible Fear Interviews, AILA InfoNet Doc. No. 14042941 (posted Apr. 29, 2014).

96 See e.g., FOR PRO SE LITIGANTS, GUIDE TO CREDIBLE FEAR & REASONABLE FEAR PROCEEDINGS, THE FLORENCE IMMIGRANT AND REFUGEE RIGHTS PROJECT, <http://www.firrp.org/resources/prose/> (“If you are waiting for a credible or reasonable fear interview you will probably not see the Florence Project until you pass and are waiting for your first hearing.”).

To offer a second example raising question about the experience level of DHS officers to make removal decisions, the regulations that govern reinstatement of removal permit DHS to summarily remove “An alien who illegally reenters the United States after having been removed, or having departed voluntarily, while under an order...”⁹⁷ However, the question of whether an entry is “lawful” or whether the procedural safeguards spelled out in the regulations are being followed are legally complex and may indicate that trained judges may be better suited to analyze each element of the reinstatement statute. In one case, Cardova-Soto v. Holder, a federal judge found that a noncitizen who returned to the United States following a removal order as a backseat passenger in a taxi after presenting herself at the port-of-entry was still making an “illegal entry” for reinstatement purposes.⁹⁸ Cardova-Soto entered the United States as an infant and eventually became a lawful permanent resident at the age of 13. She worked in fast food restaurants in order to support her family and eventually received a high school degree equivalent but because of her criminal activity was placed in removal proceedings and ordered removed based on this activity through a stipulated order of removal. Cardova-Soto returned to the United States without authorization in order to reunite with her four United States citizen children and their father and her husband, also a United States citizen.⁹⁹ While the court ultimately found that reinstatement applied, it analyzed a body of case law before making a determination that the reinstatement statute could be applied to a procedurally regular entry.¹⁰⁰

As a third example, errors can take place during the administrative removal process. To recap, administrative removal applies to individuals who are neither citizens nor green card holders and have been convicted of an aggravated felony.¹⁰¹ In ⁹⁷ See 8 C.F.R. 241.8(a).

⁹⁸ Cordova-Soto v. Holder, No. 10-9569, slip op. (10th Cir. Oct. 17, 2011); Cordova-Soto v. Holder, 732 F.3d 789 (7th Cir. 2013).

⁹⁹ See, Cordova-Soto v. Holder, 732 F.3d 789 (7th Cir. 2013).

¹⁰⁰ Cordova-Soto v. Holder, No. 10-9569, slip op. (10th Cir. Oct. 17, 2011) (Hartz, Holloway, and Porfilio, JJ.). See also, Cordova-Soto v. Holder, 732 F.3d 789 (7th Cir. 2013). For an analysis of the Cordova-Soto case and how the reinstatement of removal order stemmed from a stipulated removal order, see Jennifer Lee Koh, Rethinking Removability, 64 FLA. L. REV. 1803, 1864-18667 (2014).

¹⁰¹ See INA § 238(b)(1).

other words, administrative removal applies to someone who is in the United States in a temporary or undocumented status and has a criminal history. While the aggravated felony list is a broad one, the analysis is complicated by the fact that state, federal and foreign offenses may qualify as an “aggravated felony.” Importantly, an officer or judge cannot make a decision about whether a criminal conviction qualifies for deportation without analyzing the statute under which the noncitizen was convicted. Under the “categorical approach,” adjudicators are to look “not to the facts of the particular prior case,” but instead to whether “the state statute defining the crime of conviction” categorically fits within the “generic” federal definition of a corresponding aggravated felony.¹⁰² Even immigration judges, Board of Immigration Appeals members and federal court judges reach legally questionable conclusions that in several cases have resulted in a reversal by the United States Supreme Court.¹⁰³ For example, in Moncrieffe v. Holder, the Supreme Court reversed the Fifth Circuit and the Board of Immigration Appeals and found that a conviction for marijuana possession with intent to distribute under a Georgia statute may not be deemed a drug trafficking aggravated felony for immigration purposes.¹⁰⁴ In reaching this conclusion, the Court compared the elements of the Georgia statute with the Controlled Substance Act, the federal statute referenced in the aggravated felony definition for drug trafficking. Because the Georgia statute is broad enough to punish conduct involving a 102 Taylor v. United States, 495 U.S. 575, 599-600 (1990).

103 See, e.g., Leocal v. Ashcroft, 543 U.S. 1 (2004) (In Leocal, the Court found that because state law classified DUIs as having a mens rea of negligence or less, it was inappropriate for the lower court to classify those DUIs as “crimes of violence”, and thereby find the noncitizen guilty of an aggravated felony.); Moncrieffe v. Holder, 133 S. Ct. 1678 (2013) (possession with intent to distribute was not necessarily a felony because a conviction under state law did not consider possible exceptions for small amounts of marijuana possessed without remuneration); Carachuri-Rosendo v. Holder, 550 U.S. 563 (2010) (a second conviction for simple possession could not be an aggravated felony because the noncitizen was charged with a misdemeanor under state law and it was inappropriate for immigration courts to enhance the conviction ex post facto); Watson v. U.S., 552 U.S. 74 (2007) (under a plain English reading of the law, a noncitizen who traded drugs for a gun could not be convicted of a felony for “using” a gun during a drug trafficking crime); Lopez v. Gonzalez, 549 U.S. 47 (2006) (a drug offense that was a felony under state law but only a misdemeanor under federal law was not an aggravated felony).

104 Moncrieffe v. Holder, 133 S. Ct. 1678 (2013).

small amount of marijuana for no remuneration, the Court reasoned that it could not qualify as an aggravated felony as the Controlled Substance Act contains an “exception” for cases involving a small amount and no remuneration. Arguably, and as a result of Moncreiffe, anyone administratively removed pursuant to a state conviction similar to the Georgia statute in which there is an element of “possession with intent to distribute” but no element of remuneration or any minimum quantity of marijuana may not qualify as an aggravated felon.¹⁰⁵ Thus, an important question is if a determination of whether a person is an aggravated felon should be made by DHS as opposed to a judge. The examples above illustrate the complex analysis involved in applying expedited removal, reinstatement and administrative removal and raise legitimate concerns about sustaining a paradigm in which people can be removed without any process or regular court proceeding.

As a final example, it is possible that speed deportation programs increase the chances that DHS will mistakenly deport a United States citizen, where the screening is limited and the deportation timeline immediate. Scholars have identified the legal and factual complication of citizenship, especially one who is claiming derivative citizenship or citizenship by acquisition or one who does not know he has a claim to citizenship.¹⁰⁶ The possibility of error is higher when this complexity is combined with speed. Professor Lee Teran describes the wrongful deportation of Wilfredo Garza, the son of a United States citizen father who raised a citizenship claim to DHS:

Mr. Garza filed an application for certification of citizenship DHS and he repeatedly told the office that he had a claim to citizenship. DHS failed to consider Mr. Garza’s claim and simply removed him. The risk of removal of individuals with 105 See MONCRIEFFE V. HOLDER: IMPLICATIONS FOR DRUG CHARGES AND OTHER ISSUES INVOLVING THE CATEGORICAL APPROACH, IMMIGRANT DEFENSE PROJECT, NATIONAL IMMIGRATION PROJECT, AMERICAN IMMIGRATION COUNCIL, 6-7 (May 2013), available at <http://immigrantdefenseproject.org/resources/legal-resources/practice-advisories>.

106 See generally Jacqueline Stevens, U.S. Government Unlawfully Detaining and Deporting U.S. Citizens as Aliens, 18 VA. J. SOC. POL’Y & L. 637 (2011); See also Jennifer Lee Koh, Rethinking Removability, 64 FLA. L. REV. 1803, 1864-18667 (2014)(describing the complexity of U.S. citizenship claims and the large numbers of U.S. citizens have been subject to immigration enforcement).

citizenship claims is high when examination by DHS is limited to the identity of the individual subject to reinstatement and whether he has previously been deported or removal. The procedures implemented by DHS fail to require at a minimum a full and objective investigation of his claim, cancellation of the reinstatement order, and referral to the immigration judge. The unbridled use of INA Section 241(a)(5) under procedures where there is no hearing before an immigration judge and no meaningful opportunity to present a claim to citizenship all but guarantees that individuals like Mr. Garza who have unresolved claims to U.S. citizenship are removed.¹⁰⁷

C. The Government’s Interest

1. Improving Efficiency

The policy goals of accelerating deportation for select populations are partially economic. In describing the cost-savings associated with the expedited removal program, former INS General Counsel David Martin noted, “The ER process allows INS to issue formal removal orders even more efficiently, particularly where asylum is not an issue ... [ER] takes a matter of hours, rather than days, and in the overwhelming majority of such cases, as before, there is no genuine issue about whether fraud has been attempted.”¹⁰⁸ Accelerating removal through programs like administrative, expedited and reinstatement removal improves economic efficiency. Such removals avoid the costs associated with an administrative hearing before the immigration judge, time from the DHS trial attorney, an interpreter, law clerk, transcriber and future appeals. Indeed, EOIR statistics are staggering as immigration judges handle thousands of matters each year.¹⁰⁹ The 107 Lee. J Teran, Mexican Children of U.S. Citizens: “Vignes Prin” and Other Tales of Challenges to Asserting Acquired U.S. Citizenship, 14 SCHOLAR 583, 662-63 (Symposium 2012).

108 David Martin, Two Cheers for Expedited Removal, 40 VA. J. OF INT’L L. 673, 686.

109 EOIR Statistics for 2012 reveals that that the immigration courts completed 382,675 matters. OFFICE OF LEGISLATIVE AND PUBLIC AFFAIRS, FY2012 STATISTICAL YEARBOOK, EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF IMMIGRATION REVIEW, B2, crisis faced by immigration courts persist and as stated in a front page story that ran in The Washington Post in February 2014:

[D]ay after day, case after case, in one of the 57 overwhelmed immigration courts across the country. Here, on the second floor of a high rise in Crystal City, tissue boxes are stacked near the courtroom entrance and attorneys push rolling file cabinets, because a briefcase is no longer sufficient to hold caseloads that have tripled in the past decade.”¹¹⁰

Described by one immigration judge as “doing death penalty cases in traffic court” the job of an immigration judge is stressful:

Tough was hearing 1,500 cases per year while federal judges decided 440. It was sharing one law clerk with other immigration judges while each federal judge had four clerks of his own. It was being scheduled to sit on the bench for 36 hours a week and listen to asylum cases that detailed people’s escapes from gangs, rapes, beheadings, human trafficking and torture; and then having to objectively ask those people for the documents, for the scars, for the proof; and then making a judgment about the character of those people, first through a video feed and then through an interpreter; and then judging the merits of their cases in the shifting landscape of immigration law; and finally taking a deep breath, synthesizing so much information, and rendering a lawful, smart, artful, confident decision

Table 1 (rev. March 2013) available at <http://www.justice.gov/eoir/statspub/fy12syb.pdf>. According to TRAC, as of January, 2014, the number of pending deportation cases was at an all-time high of 360,186. Backlog of Pending Cases in Immigration Courts as of January 2014, TRACIMMIGRATION, (2014), http://trac.syr.edu/phptools/immigration/court_backlog/apprep_backlog.php (last visited March 10, 2014).

110 Eli Saslow, In a Crowded Immigration Court, Seven Minutes to Decide a Family’s Future, THE WASHINGTON POST (Feb. 2, 2014), http://www.washingtonpost.com/national/in-a-crowded-immigration-court-seven-minutes-to-decide-a-familys-future/2014/02/02/518c3e3e-8798-11e3-a5bd-844629433ba3_story.html.

on the spot, because the schedule allowed little time for reflection or written decisions before the next case began.¹¹¹

The tension faced in immigration courts was heightened by a furlough of the federal government in 2013 which set the court backlog back even further. As described in one related news account: “Immigration Judge Dana Leigh Marks said she doesn't have two weeks open on her calendar in San Francisco's immigration court for merit hearings until June 2017. And she can't just bump people with court dates this year, because they've also been waiting for their day in court.”¹¹² If people who are placed in removal proceedings are waiting for up to one or two years to be scheduled for a trial or what is commonly called the “individual calendar hearing”¹¹³ then what kind of resources would be needed to provide such hearings for individuals who are currently processed through a speed deportation program?

111 Eli Saslow, In a Crowded Immigration Court, Seven Minutes to Decide a Family's Future, THE WASHINGTON POST (Feb. 2, 2014), http://www.washingtonpost.com/national/in-a-crowded-immigration-court-seven-minutes-to-decide-a-familys-future/2014/02/02/518c3e3e-8798-11e3-a5bd-844629433ba3_story.html

112 Amy Taxin, Government Shutdown Hurt More Than 37,000 Immigration Cases, HUFFINGTON POST (Feb. 22, 2014, 12:47PM), http://www.huffingtonpost.com/2014/02/22/government-shutdown-immigration_n_4838375.html. In 2013, the average number of days a pending case had been open was 760 days; in January 2014, the average was 809 days. Immigration Court Backlog Tool, TRACIMMIGRATION (2014), http://trac.syr.edu/phptools/immigration/court_backlog/ (last visited March 10, 2014); See also, 555-Day Backlog at Houston Immigration Court, LEXISNEXIS NEWSROOM, IMMIGRATION LAW (Dec. 24, 2013, 9:21AM) <http://www.lexisnexis.com/legalnewsroom/immigration/b/outsidenews/archive/2013/12/24/555-day-backlog-at-houston-immigration-court.aspx>; AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION, COMMISSION ON IMMIGRATION, REFORMING THE IMMIGRATION SYSTEM: PROPOSALS TO PROMOTE INDEPENDENCE, FAIRNESS, EFFICIENCY, AND PROFESSIONALISM IN THE ADJUDICATION OF IMMIGRATION CASES (2010), available at http://www.americanbar.org/content/dam/aba/migrated/Immigration/PublicDocuments/aba_complete_full_report.authcheckdam.pdf.

113 INTRODUCTION TO THE MASTER CALENDAR, U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF IMMIGRATION REVIEW, IMMIGRATION JUDGE BENCHBOOK, available at <http://www.justice.gov/eoir/vll/benchbook/tools/Purpose%20and%20History%20of%20MC.htm> (last visited Feb. 25, 2014).

Proponents of speed deportation also may view it as an efficient deterrent for stemming unlawful migration into the United States.¹¹⁴ Arguably, a Mexican national who is considering re-entry into the United States following a removal order may avoid entering the United States based on his knowledge of the reinstatement statute and fact that he can be removed without consideration of his equities like a United States citizen child. But speed removal programs are not effective as deterrents if people have compelling reasons to be in the United States. For example, reunification with a family or prospect of steady employment are factors that often propel migration in spite of the related risks. Likewise, it is hard to confirm if individuals potentially at risk for speed deportation have knowledge about these programs and the consequences that follow. Nevertheless, the literature on unauthorized migration suggests that people come to the United States for opportunity and in spite of the risks of potential deportation.¹¹⁵ Beyond the scope of this Article but critical to understanding the root causes for migration is the wave of families and unaccompanied minors entering the United States from Central America. Social scientists, legal experts and the United Nations have identified violence not poverty as a key driver for this migration wave.¹¹⁶

2. Enforcement Mission

Another important policy question is the degree to which speed removal programs support the mission of DHS. According to

114 See e.g., <http://fpc.state.gov/documents/organization/54512.pdf>
<http://fpc.state.gov/documents/organization/54512.pdf> CRS-15 (“In addition, there is evidence that the most recent expansion of expedited removal along the southwest border has decreased the apprehensions of OTMs along the border,⁷² which may imply that the expansion of expedited removal has been a deterrent to those trying to enter the country illegally.”)

115 See e.g., Chiamaka Nwosu, Jeanne Batalova, and Gregory Auclair, Frequently Requested Statistics on Immigrants and Immigration in the United States, MIGRATION POLICY INSTITUTE (April 28, 2014), <http://www.migrationpolicy.org/article/frequently-requested-statistics-immigrants-and-immigration-united-states>.

116 See e.g., Sonia Nazario, The Children of the Drug Wars, A Refugee Crisis, Not an Immigration Crisis, New York Times, July 11, 2014
<http://www.nytimes.com/2014/07/13/opinion/sunday/a-refugee-crisis-not-an-immigration-crisis.html? r=0>

its website, ICE’s primary mission is to “promote homeland security and public safety through the criminal and civil enforcement of federal laws governing border control, customs, trade and immigration.”¹¹⁷ Higher deportation numbers also benefit the image the government seeks to portray to the policymakers who support amplified immigration enforcement. As described in the press release by Department of Homeland Security in connection with its 2013 removals:¹¹⁸

These figures highlight ICE's ongoing commitment to primary immigration enforcement missions: the apprehension of criminal aliens and other immigration violators in the interior of the United States; and the detention and removal of individuals apprehended by ICE and U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP) while attempting to unlawfully enter the United States.¹¹⁹

ICE linked the removal numbers to the agency’s commitment to enforcement and the surge in removals involving an identified “priority”¹²⁰ but advocates for immigration reform were critical of the continued deportation apparatus and fact that some people deported might in the future qualify for a legalization program.¹²¹

117 Overview, ICE, <http://www.ice.gov/about/overview/> (last visited Mar. 29, 2014).

118 FY 2013: ICE Announces Year-End Removal Numbers, ICE, NEWSROOM (Dec. 13, 2013), <https://www.ice.gov/news/releases/1312/131219washingtondc.htm>.

119 FY 2013: ICE Announces Year-End Removal Numbers, ICE, NEWSROOM (Dec. 13, 2013), <https://www.ice.gov/news/releases/1312/131219washingtondc.htm>.

120 See John Morton, Director, U.S. Immigration & Customs Enforcement, on Civil Immigration Enforcement: Priorities for the Apprehension, Detention, and Removal of Aliens (Mar. 2, 2011), available at <http://www.ice.gov/doclib/news/releases/2011/110302washingtondc.pdf>; See also, SHOBA SIVAPRASAD WADHIA, IMMIGRATION POLICY CENTER, AMERICAN IMMIGRATION COUNCIL, READING THE MORTON MEMO: FEDERAL PRIORITIES AND PROSECUTORIAL DISCRETION (Dec. 2010), available at <http://www.immigrationpolicy.org/special-reports/reading-morton-memo-federal-priorities-and-prosecutorial-discretion>.

121 See e.g., Walter Ewing, New ICE Deportation Statistics Are No Cause for Celebration, IMMIGRATIONIMPACT.COM, (Dec. 20, 2013),

Likewise, immigration advocates have been wary about how DHS defines a “priority”, especially as “recent illegal entrants” and “aliens who are fugitives or otherwise obstruct immigration controls” are deemed to be “priorities” for enforcement even though many people who fall into these categories lack a criminal background or history that ordinary people would calculate as serious.¹²² Criticism over DHS’s removal record has been directed not only at DHS, the agency responsible for executing removal orders, but also to the Obama administration. At the annual awards dinner of the National Council of La Raza, its president Janet Murgia labeled President Barack Obama as the “deporter-in-chief.”¹²³ At the same dinner, Democratic Senator Robert Menendez remarked “While we continue waiting for the House of Representatives to wake up and move on immigration reform legislation, I urge the President to take action today and halt needless deportations that are splitting apart our families and communities.”¹²⁴ Even before ICE released its removal numbers for 2013, policy think tanks and journalists wrote fierce headlines highlighting that President Obama has deported more noncitizens each year than were deported during the entirety of the George W. Bush administration.¹²⁵ While it may be simple to conclude that DHS has utilized speed deportations in order to keep their removal <http://immigrationimpact.com/2013/12/20/new-ice-deportation-statistics-are-no-cause-for-celebration/>.

122 See John Morton, Director, U.S. Immigration & Customs Enforcement, on Civil Immigration Enforcement: Priorities for the Apprehension, Detention, and Removal of Aliens (Mar. 2, 2011), available at <http://www.ice.gov/doclib/news/releases/2011/110302washingtondc.pdf>; see also Maria Ines Zamudio, Felony Deportation Decline as ICE Officers Resist Former Chief’s 2010 Directive, THE CHICAGO REPORTER (Oct. 30, 2013), <http://www.chicagoreporter.com/felony-deportations-decline-ice-officers-resist-former-chiefs-2010-directive>.

123 Justin Sink, Obama Rebukes Deportation Criticism, THE HILL (March 6, 2014), <http://thehill.com/blogs/blog-briefing-room/200106-obama-rebukes-deportation-criticism>.

124 Alexander Bolton, Dems to Obama: Slow the Deportations, THE HILL (June 6, 2014), <http://thehill.com/homenews/senate/200066-dems-to-obama-slow-the-deportations>.

125 See, e.g., Ana Gonzalez-Barrera and Mark Hugo Lopez, High Rate of Deportations Continue Under Obama Despite Latino Disapproval, PEW RESEARCH CENTER FACTTANK (Sept. 19, 2013), <http://www.pewresearch.org/fact-tank/2013/09/19/high-rate-of-deportations-continue-under-obama-despite-latino-disapproval/>.

statistics high for political reasons, the policy may not be as simple and is worthy of debate.

In March 2014, President Obama indicated that DHS would review its deportation numbers and emphasized his “deep concern about the pain too many families feel from the separation that comes from our broken immigration system.”¹²⁶ Thereafter, members of the media, members of Congress and advocates published ideas and recommendations for modifying the current deportation policy. Indeed, the “government interest” behind speed deportation is further complicated by efficient removal of priorities on the one hand and protecting family members and others with equities from removal on the other hand, and makes it that more difficult to clarify. Nevertheless, creating an enforcement policy that is also humane is part of the mission of DHS. In discussing how expedited removal in particular is tied to a broader enforcement strategy, Professor David Martin argues:

It makes sense to concentrate immigration enforcement at the border. As a general matter, catching violators during the first attempt at entry prevents inadmissible aliens from establishing homes, employment, and other ties to this country. This enforcement strategy also makes it easier for the individual involved to resume their lives in their countries of origin.”¹²⁷

Though Professor’s Martin’s view was provided in the context of expedited removals only, it raises a policy question for this Article about whether first-time violators with an expedited removal order are distinguishable from other subjects of speed deportation who have the kinds of equities and hardships showcased by 126 Transcript of Press Briefing by Press Secretary Jay Carney and Secretary of Education Arne Duncan on March 14, 2014, THE WHITE HOUSE, <http://www.whitehouse.gov/photos-and-video/video/2014/03/14/press-briefing>; See also, Michael D. Shear, Obama Orders Review of Deportations, THE NEW YORK TIMES (Mar. 13, 2014), <http://www.nytimes.com/2014/03/14/us/obama-orders-review-of-deportations.html>; Michael D. Shear and Julia Preston, Deportation Policy Shift is Signaled by Obama, THE NEW YORK TIMES (Mar. 14, 2014), http://www.nytimes.com/2014/03/15/us/politics/deportation-policy-shift-is-signaled-by-obama.html?hpw&rref=politics&_r=0.

127 David Martin, Two Cheers for Expedited Removal, 40 VA. J. OF INT’L. L. 673, 687.

immigration advocates. Certainly, and as identified earlier, there remains the possibility for one person to interact with more than one type of speed deportation program by for example entering the United States without documents and ejected through expedited removal and re-entering the United States years later only to face a reinstatement order and irrespective of equities.

IV. THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN DISCRETION AND SPEED DEPORTATION

The Department of Homeland Security has discretion to provide a day in court for individuals it might otherwise subject to a speed deportation.¹²⁸ Individuals who have equities like a United States citizen spouse or a serious medical disability or eligibility for formal relief should be given a full court proceeding and the opportunity apply for relief from removal that he may otherwise be prohibited from seeking. The premise that DHS can exercise discretion by placing such individuals in removal proceedings before an immigration judge (as opposed to a speedy one) is established in the statute, case law, general principles of prosecutorial discretion, agency memoranda and secondary treatises.¹²⁹ “Prosecutorial discretion” refers to a decision by the immigration agency about whether, and to what extent, the DHS should enforce immigration laws against a person or group or persons.

Broad authority for prosecutorial discretion can be found at section 103 of the INA which affirms that DHS “be charged with the administration and enforcement of this Act and all other laws relating to the immigration and naturalization of aliens.”¹³⁰ The legality of prosecutorial discretion has also been recognized by the Supreme Court. In the case of Arizona v. United States, the Court wrote “Removal is a civil matter, and one of its principal features is the broad discretion exercised by immigration officials, who must decide whether to pursue removal at all.”¹³¹ Such discretion is also supported by the language of the statute and case law specific to reinstatement, expedited removal and administrative removal. In the reinstatement context, the Ninth Circuit found “Even though an alien is not entitled to a hearing before an immigration judge on the issue of reinstatement of a prior removal order, nothing in [the statute] or its implementing regulations deprives the agency of discretion to afford an alien a new plenary removal hearing.”¹³² Citing to the wide prosecutorial discretion held by DHS, the court continued:

¹²⁸ See generally John Morton, Director, U.S. Immigration & Customs Enforcement, on Exercising Prosecutorial Discretion Consistent with the Civil Immigration Enforcement Priorities of the Agency for the Apprehension, Detention, and Removal of Aliens (June 17, 2011), available at <http://www.ice.gov/doclib/secure-communities/pdf/prosecutorial-discretion-memo.pdf>.

¹²⁹ See, e.g., § INA 238(b)(1); The Morton Memo, John Morton, Director, U.S. Immigration & Customs Enforcement, on Exercising Prosecutorial Discretion Consistent with the Civil Immigration Enforcement Priorities of the Agency for the Apprehension, Detention, and Removal of Aliens (June 17, 2011), available at <http://www.ice.gov/doclib/secure-communities/pdf/prosecutorial-discretion-memo.pdf>; The Howard Memo, Memorandum from William J. Howard, Principal Legal Advisor, U.S. Immigration & Customs Enforcement, on Prosecutorial Discretion 3 (Oct. 24, 2005) (on file with Shoba Sivaprasad Wadhia)

Particularly when there is any question about whether the requirements of 241.5 [sic] have been satisfied and even they have been, an ICE officer may decide to forgo reinstatement of a prior order of removal in favor of initiating new removal proceedings with accompanying procedural rights to counsel and a hearing in immigration court.¹³³

In the administrative removal context, the statute explicitly gives DHS a choice to place a person in speed deportation or 240 removal proceedings. Specially, section 238(b)(1) of the INA states that the [Secretary of Homeland Security] “[M]ay, in the case of an alien described in paragraph (2) [relating to non-LPRS] determine the deportability of such alien under section 237(a)(2)(A)(iii)(citations omitted) and issue an order of removal pursuant to the procedures set forth in this subsection or section 240 (citations omitted).”¹³⁴ The language of the statute leaves open

130 INA § 103(a)(1).

131 Arizona v. U.S., No. 11-182, 1 (9th Cir., June 25, 2012)

132 Villa-Anguiano v. Attorney General, 727 F. 3d 873, 878 (2013).

133 Villa-Anguiano v. Attorney General, 727 F. 3d 873, 878 (2013) (emphasis added).

134 See INA § 238(b)(1).

the possibility that DHS has prosecutorial discretion to place a person legally subject to 238(b) before a trier of fact in a 240 removal proceedings.

Likewise, in the expedited removal context, the Board of Immigration Appeals held that INA § 235(b)(1)(A)(i) does not limit the prosecutorial discretion of DHS to place “arriving aliens” in removal proceedings under section 240 of the Act.¹³⁵ Notably, the Board held:

First, we observe that the issue arises in the context of a purported restraint on the DHS’s exercise of its prosecutorial discretion. In that context, we find that Congress’ use of the term “shall” in section 235(b)(1)(A)(i) of the Act does not carry its ordinary meaning, namely, that an act is mandatory. It is common for the term “shall” to mean “may” when it relates to decisions made by the Executive Branch of the Government on whether to charge an individual and on what charge or charges to bring.¹³⁶

The Board of Immigration Appeals has also found that the statute supports the choice of DHS to place individuals who may be subject to expedited removal into a regular removal proceeding instead. While one part of the statute states that an officer faced with arriving noncitizens who are inadmissible for reasons of fraud or a lack of proper documentation “shall order the alien removed from the United States without further hearing or review”¹³⁷ the statutory language also considers these same individuals for 135 Matter of E-R-M- & L-R-M-, 25 I&N Dec. 520 (BIA 2011). Notably, the Board itself acknowledged that placing individuals in removal proceedings would be preferable. “The respondents are not prejudiced by their placement in section 240 removal proceedings and, in fact, have more rights available to them in proceedings under section 240 than in expedited removal proceedings, where aliens may only raise persecution-related relief.” MARY KENNEY, PROSECUTORIAL DISCRETION: HOW TO ADVOCATE FOR YOUR CLIENT, LEGAL ACTION CENTER-AMERICAN IMMIGRATION COUNCIL, 2 n.1 (June 2014), available at <http://www.legalactioncenter.org/sites/default/files/ProsecutorialDiscretion-11-30-10.pdf>.

136 Matter of E-R-M- & L-R-M-, 25 I&N Dec. 520 (BIA 2011).

137 See INA 235(b)(1)(A)(i).

regular removal proceedings. As articulated by the Board of Immigration Appeals:

[W]e find that the statutory scheme itself supports our reading that the DHS has discretion to put aliens in section 240 removal proceedings even though they may also be subject to expedited removal under section 235(b)(1)(A)(i) of the Act. Section 235(b)(2)(A) of the Act provides that “in the case of an alien who is an applicant for admission, if the examining immigration officer determines that an alien seeking admission is not clearly and beyond a doubt entitled to be admitted, the alien shall be detained for a proceeding under section 240.”¹³⁸

Agency guidance documents have also affirmed the role of prosecutorial discretion in immigration law. The act of abstaining from enforcing the immigration law against a person through a favorable exercise prosecutorial discretion can take place at many different stages of the enforcement process, not just the charging stage. Not only may the immigration agency exercise prosecutorial discretion at different stages of enforcement, but it may also use a variety of different tools to carry out this discretion. There are more than twenty different kinds of prosecutorial discretion in immigration law, such as: a decision to cancel a charging document called the Notice to Appear; a decision to release a person from detention even if she legally qualifies for custody; a decision to not execute a removal order and instead issue a stay of deportation and supervision order for someone who has already been ordered removed; among others.¹³⁹ In the seminal guidance document from ICE on prosecutorial discretion identifies “deciding to issue, reissue, serve, file, or cancel a Notice to Appear

138 Matter of E-R-M- & L-R-M-, 25 I&N Dec. 520 (BIA 2011).

139 See John Morton, Director, U.S. Immigration & Customs Enforcement, on Exercising Prosecutorial Discretion Consistent with the Civil Immigration Enforcement Priorities of the Agency for the Apprehension, Detention, and Removal of Aliens (June 17, 2011), available at <http://www.ice.gov/doclib/secure-communities/pdf/prosecutorial-discretion-memo.pdf>; see also, CENTER FOR IMMIGRANTS’ RIGHTS, PENNSYLVANIA STATE UNIVERSITY DICKINSON SCHOOL OF LAW, TO FILE OR NOT TO FILE 16 (Oct. 2013) available at <https://law.psu.edu/sites/default/files/documents/pdfs/NTAReportFinal.pdf>.

(NTA)” as among several forms of prosecutorial discretion.¹⁴⁰ Importantly, the filing of the NTA is an important point in the immigration enforcement process as it commences a “removal proceeding” pursuant to 240 of the Act.¹⁴¹ In general, while a decision by DHS to refrain from filing an NTA often is viewed as a favorable exercise of prosecutorial discretion (e.g., in the case of a noncitizen who is ineligible for any relief from removal), the filing of an NTA is a positive act for individuals otherwise subject to administrative, expedited or reinstatement removal because it provides them with the opportunity to apply for relief in a full and fair hearing before a neutral trier-of-fact.¹⁴² The agency must consider humanitarian factors and the possibility of other relief when deciding whether to place a person who legally qualifies for speed deportation into removal proceedings instead.¹⁴³

140 The Morton Memo, John Morton, Director, U.S. Immigration & Customs Enforcement, on Exercising Prosecutorial Discretion Consistent with the Civil Immigration Enforcement Priorities of the Agency for the Apprehension, Detention, and Removal of Aliens (June 17, 2011), available at <http://www.ice.gov/doclib/secure-communities/pdf/prosecutorial-discretion-memo.pdf>.

141 8 C.F.R. § 1003.14(a).

142 See, e.g., CENTER FOR IMMIGRANTS’ RIGHTS, PENNSYLVANIA STATE UNIVERSITY DICKINSON SCHOOL OF LAW, TO FILE OR NOT TO FILE 7 n.9 (OCT. 2013) available at <https://law.psu.edu/sites/default/files/documents/pdfs/NTAReportFinal.pdf> (pointing out types of cases where an immigrant in speed removal proceedings might seek to be placed in ordinary removal proceedings in order to seek some benefit otherwise unavailable to them).

143 See e.g., John Morton, Director, U.S. Immigration & Customs Enforcement, on Exercising Prosecutorial Discretion Consistent with the Civil Immigration Enforcement Priorities of the Agency for the Apprehension, Detention, and Removal of Aliens (June 17, 2011) (“The following positive factors should prompt particular care and consideration:

- veterans and members of the U.S. armed forces;
- long-time lawful permanent residents;
- minors and elderly individuals;
- individuals present in the United States since childhood;
- pregnant or nursing women;
- victims of domestic violence; trafficking, or other serious crimes;
- individuals who suffer from a serious mental or physical disability; and
- individuals with serious health conditions”), available at

<http://www.ice.gov/doclib/secure-communities/pdf/prosecutorial-discretion-memo.pdf>.

One policy challenge for advocates seeking to rely on guidance documents to advance prosecutorial discretion in these situations is the fact that the enforcement arm of DHS does not support this policy; rather, ICE supports a policy that discourages NTA issuance in favor of speed deportation as a matter of prosecutorial discretion. For example, one memo issued by DHS in 2005 instructs “We should attempt to discourage issuance of NTAs where there are other options available, such as administrative removal, crewman removal, expedited removal, or reinstatement.”¹⁴⁴ Arguably, the desire by DHS to discourage NTAs are economically motivated and when the noncitizen lacks family ties, equities, eligibility for immigration relief outside of withholding of removal or Convention Against Torture, or other humanitarian factors that should be considered. However, it may be also true that without a Notice to Appear or removal hearing, the government is unable to identify individuals who might fall into one of these more sympathetic categories. For example, if a person is subject to an administrative removal order because of an alleged aggravated felony conviction, DHS may have no reason to elicit information from the noncitizen about his equities or individual circumstances.¹⁴⁵ Moreover, even when a person subject to reinstatement or administrative removal expresses a reasonable fear that is eventually documented by an asylum officer, the only forms of relief considered by the immigration judge at a withholding only hearing are traditional withholding of removal and protection under Convention Against Torture, neither of which necessitate an exploration into the discretionary factors specific to an individual or potential other relief such as adjustment of status or cancellation of removal.

Each time DHS places a person in administrative, expedited or reinstatement of removal without consideration of 144 Memorandum from William J. Howard, Principal Legal Advisor, U.S. Immigration & Customs Enforcement, on Prosecutorial Discretion 3 (Oct. 24, 2005) (on file with Shoba Sivaprasad Wadhia).

145 One scholar argues that “court-observers, advocates, and federal judges frequently note the fervent manner in which some ICE attorneys prosecute removal cases by pursuing inaccurate or inflated grounds for removal, refusing to negotiate, stipulate, or even communicate with noncitizens or their representatives before hearings; failing to turn over evidence bearing on removability; and opposing discretionary relief no matter how clear the merits or how strong the equities.” See Jason A. Cade, The Challenge of Seeking Justice Done in Removal Proceedings, 89 TUL. L. REV. 4 (forthcoming 2014-2015).

specific individual factors like the presence of family in the United States, the ambiguity around the underlying conduct giving rise to removal and other humanitarian circumstances, DHS is failing to exercise prosecutorial discretion. Using the example of Eduardo above, DHS could use its discretion under the statute or general principles of prosecutorial discretion to place Eduardo in regular removal proceedings by filing a Notice to Appear in lieu of issuing him an administrative removal order. The benefit for Eduardo is the opportunity to apply for relief from removal such as adjustment of status based on marriage to a United States citizen and a waiver of inadmissibility of his criminal conviction. Eduardo or counsel acting on his behalf would also have the opportunity to challenge removability before the immigration judge. Importantly, DHS placing Eduardo into removal proceedings would not automatically lead to relief for Eduardo, but it would provide him with a day in court and the opportunity to seek relief and related waivers from an immigration judge which are not available to individuals subject to a final administrative removal order.

VI. CONCLUSION

This Article began with an examination of deportations resulting from the expedited removal, administrative removal and reinstatement of removal orders and considered whether these programs are good policy following the framework outlined Mathews v. Eldridge. This Article then examined the degree to which the immigration agency has discretion to place individuals subject to a speed removal program into regular removal proceedings.

DHS should provide a fair day in court for those who qualify for relief from removal or have determined by the administration to warrant protection from removal based on individual equities.¹⁴⁶ DHS could issue a guideline stating that any person facing a legally sufficient charge or determination that he is removable or inadmissible through expedited, administrative or reinstatement of removal should be automatically screened under the following factors to determine if a regular or full court proceeding is appropriate:

¹⁴⁶ Possibly, a full review and modification of immigration prosecutorial discretion would reduce the number of noncitizens who are targeted for enforcement in the first place but a discussion of broader administrative solutions like deferred action are beyond the scope of this Article.

- eligibility for relief from removal, including, but not limited to, challenges to removability, adjustment of status or viable asylum claims
- veterans and members of the U.S. armed forces;
- long-time lawful permanent residents;
- minors¹⁴⁷ and elderly individuals;
- individuals present in the United States since childhood;
- pregnant or nursing women;
- victims of domestic violence; trafficking, or other serious crimes;
- parents of US citizen children
- individuals who suffer from a serious mental or physical disability; and
- individuals with serious health conditions.¹⁴⁸

DHS could create a screening form for officers to use in conjunction with its decision about whether to place a person in speed deportation. As a legal matter, this screening would not undermine the existing statutory framework for speed deportation. With any proposal, screening individuals may raise costs but they are necessary to enable the agency to carry out its own policy in a prudent manner and at a minimum can save the agency costs associated with litigation, media stories and demands by advocates and attorneys for better solutions.

While the Article supports the authority and use of discretion by DHS to place noncitizens subject to a speed removal into removal proceedings before an immigration judge, it is necessary to also consider the degree to which this position can be reconciled with the policy challenges faced by immigration courts.

147 This category should include unaccompanied minors based on a plain reading of the term and the recent policy announcements by the Administration to improve safeguards for this population. See e.g., Justice Department and CNCS Announces New Partnership to Enhance Immigration Courts and Provide Critical Assistance to Unaccompanied Minors, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE OFFICE OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS (June 6, 2014), available at <http://www.justice.gov/opa/pr/2014/June/14-ag-609.html>.

148 Several of these factors are classified as warranting particular consideration for a favorable act of prosecutorial discretion in John Morton, Director, U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement, on Exercising Prosecutorial Discretion Consistent with the Civil Immigration Enforcement Priorities of the Agency for the Apprehension, Detention, and Removal of Aliens (June 17, 2011), available at <http://www.ice.gov/doclib/secure-communities/pdf/prosecutorial-discretion-memo.pdf>.

Addressing the tension between this Article’s recommendation, namely to boost the number of cases by employing prosecutorial discretion in favor of a Notice to Appear for individuals who might ordinarily qualify for a speed deportation program in the face of an overstretched immigration court system is a difficult task. However, it may very well be worth the expense to protect the noncitizen from removal or at the very least provide her with the dignity and protection of a day in court. Moreover, there are costs associated with the family members and responsibilities a deportee leaves behind, like the primary care for a United States citizen child or full time employment for a burgeoning United States company.¹⁴⁹

If speed deportation programs are here to stay, DHS must operate these programs with an understanding for how discretion fits into this process and protect those who bear the qualities that demonstrate inclusion within the United States fabric.

149 As synthesized in one article: The deportations [of parents] have a ripple effect, advocates say. A 2010 Urban Institute study looked at the consequences of parent arrest, detention and deportation on nearly 200 children from 85 families in six locations. Most families lost a working parent, and housing instability and food insecurity were prevalent. About two-thirds of the children experienced changes in their eating and sleeping habits in the months afterward. More than half said they cried a lot and were more fearful. A third showed more anger or aggression Michael Alison Chandler, Deportations of Parents Can Cast the Lives of U.S.-Citizen Kids into Turmoil, WASHINGTON POST (Dec. 29, 2013), http://www.washingtonpost.com/local/education/deportations-of-parents-can-cast-the-lives-of-us-citizen-kids-into-turmoil/2013/12/29/abdf23aa-6b4c-11e3-b405-7e360f7e9fd2_story.html. See also, Eli Saslow, A ‘Band-Aid’ for 800 Children, WASHINGTON POST (July 5, 2014) <http://www.washingtonpost.com/sf/national/2014/07/05/a-band-aid-for-800-children/>.